Two New Texts

EXPOSITORY WRITING

By JAMES MERVIN CURL, Formerly Instructor in the University of Illinois

This textbook for college classes discusses the definite task of effectively conveying ideas through written discourse. It makes a strong appeal to the interest of intelligent young people not only by its original and effective method of training them to write clearly about things that they are interested in, but also through its wealth of illustration from the best contemporary writers. There are a large number of original exercises designed to be of real service to the student in his actual writing. $1.25. Postpaid.

SENTENCES AND THINKING

By NORMAN FOERSTER and J. M. STEADMAN, JR., Department of English,
University of North Carolina

Designed for the first term of Freshman English, this text gives a concise and well-knitted account of the essentials of sentence-making. The student is trained to think out the reasons for "rules" and is thus taught to express thought accurately. In press.

Show Your Pupils How to Dramatize!

Show them how to take great historic and literary characters out of their books and make them real. For facts do not live unless they are related to experience.

The plays described below are the work of pupils in a private school in New York City. They will serve as suggestive models for others and they are admirable for presentations on the amateur stage.

SCHOOL PLAYS

1. All's True

Describes a scene in London at the time of Shakespeare, the occasion being in honor of the great dramatist on the first enactment of a new play bearing the above name. A dramatic situation is created by the burning of the Globe Theatre and the destruction of the play. Noted characters from Shakespeare's plays, impersonated by the children, come in before the disconsolate dramatist, and reveal to him how he has charmed, instructed, and inspired all classes, throughout the ages.

2. The Long Road to To-Morrow

Presents the characters of history, introduced by the Spirit of the Past, who shows that there is always progress. Characters are chosen to represent what the present has cast aside, as slavery, religious persecution, etc., and what the future will hold, as humanitarianism, democracy, social justice, etc.

3. A Girl's Dream of Pictures and Painters

Based on a course in Art Appreciation (using University Prints).

Price 20 cents postpaid, for each play

THE NEW AMERICA

SHORT STORIES OF THE NEW AMERICA

Selected and edited by MARY A. LASELLE, of the Newton (Mass.) High Schools
224 pages, 12 mo, 80 cents

A collection of ten short stories by American authors which interpret the America of their age to high-school pupils. It contains selections from Dorothy Canfield's Home Fires in France and from Empey's Over the Top, with representative stories by the following authors: A. S. Pier, Fisher Ames, Jr., Elsie Singmaster, Albert Payson Terhune, J. F. Dwyer, Grace Coolidge, Mary B. Pulver, and F. O. Bartlett. These stories are good literature as well as good Americanism. No teacher of English can afford to neglect this collection in her plans for next fall.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S ADDRESSES

Edited by GEORGE MCLEAN HARPER, Professor in Princeton University
(English Readings for Schools) 311 pages, 52 cents

CHAUNCY W. WELLS, University of California:

"It is indeed a pleasure and a privilege to have in one compact volume the epoch-marking speeches and state papers of our great President. As one reads the book through, one wonders whether there has ever been in one small volume so great a contribution to liberal thinking in politics as this book contains; certainly not for a century has the world seen anything like it."

ATLANTIC TEXTS

THE CREED of the Atlantic Monthly is a simple one: to be useful; to be pleasant; to be critical with tolerance, and instructive without pedantry; to have many moods, but the same character; to swear by honest English; and never to forget that, of all useless things, an uninteresting magazine least deserves salvation.—This, then, is the basis of Atlantic books.
